

Specific Contributions by the Ph.D. Program in Clinical-Community Psychology during Academic Year 2006/2007

- UAA doctoral students taught four courses in Fall 2006:
 - PSY 425 (3-credit course for psychology majors) - instructing a total of 26 undergraduate students
 - three sections of PSY 112 (1-credit course) - instructing a total of 35 undergraduate students
- UAF doctoral students taught one course in Fall 2006:
 - PSY 240 (3-credit course for psychology majors) - instructing a total of 65 undergraduate students
- UAA doctoral students taught four courses in Spring 2007:
 - PSY 425 (3-credit course for psychology majors) - instructing a total of 25 undergraduate students
 - three sections of PSY 112 (1-credit course) - instructing a total of 81 undergraduate students
- UAF doctoral students taught two courses in Spring 2007:
 - PSY 240 (3-credit course for psychology majors) - instructing a total of 44 undergraduate students
 - PSY 360 (3-credit elective for psychology majors) - instructing a total of 29 undergraduate students
- UAA doctoral students served as teaching assistants for two courses in Fall 2006:
 - PSY 150 (3-credit required course for psychology majors) assisting with a total of 97 (52+45 in two sections) undergraduate students
 - PSY 260L (1-credit required psychology lab) – assisting with a total of 44 (22+22 in two sections) undergraduate students
- UAF doctoral students served as teaching assistants for two courses in Fall 2006:
 - PSY 623 (3-credit required course for Psychology PhD students) assisting with a total of 8 graduate students
 - PSY 330 (3-credit elective for psychology majors) – assisting with a total of 50 undergraduate students
- UAA doctoral students served as teaching assistants for one course in Spring 2007:
 - PSY 260L (1-credit required psychology lab) – assisting with a total of 36 (15+21 in two sections) undergraduate students
- UAF doctoral students served as teaching assistants for two courses in Spring 2007:
 - PSY 445 (3-credit elective for psychology majors) assisting with a total of 40 undergraduate students
 - PSY 275 (3-credit required course for psychology majors) – assisting with a total of 30 undergraduate students
- UAA doctoral students supported clinical services provision through practicum placement in the Psychological Services Center, providing:
 - Approximately 500 hours of therapy services to students and community members
 - over 30 hours of supervision for master's student clinician in the Psychological Services Center, relieving faculty of this burden
- UAF doctoral students supported clinical services provision through practicum placement in the Psychology Department Clinic, providing:
 - Approximately 500 hours of therapy services to students and community members
- UAA doctoral students supported clinical services provision through practicum placement in the Veterans Administration Homeless Veterans Services, providing:

- Over 350 hours of therapy services to homeless veterans, many of whom are Alaska Native
- The program created learning opportunities for other students and faculty in the Departments of Psychology through the offering of colloquia, for example, the following seminars and lectures were open to all:
 - Eduardo Duran seminar “Working with Native American and Alaska Native Peoples.”
 - EJ David Colloquium “The Colonial Mentality Project: The Psychological Study of Colonial Mentality Among Filipino Americans.”
 - Susan Staggs colloquium “Health and social justice for low-income populations: An ecological, multidisciplinary approach.”
 - Vivian Gonzales colloquium “The Relationship of Suicidal Ideation and Alcohol Use in Underage Drinkers: An Affect Regulation Model.”
 - Inna Rivkin colloquium “HIV Prevention and Intervention in a Community Context: Studies Integrating Social, Cultural and Historical Factors.”
 - UAF President’s Professor Kim Hopper presented a four session short course for Doctoral students on interviewing cross culturally.
 - UAF, through the Center for Alaska Native Health Research, presented a two-day Forced Acculturation Roundtable featuring Drs. Karina Walters, Edison Trickett, Dina Birman, Beti Thompson, and Bonnie Duran. Sessions included:
 - Forced acculturation and historical trauma: Implications for health and health research.
 - Diseases of development and unplanned social change: Relationship to health outcomes and designing prevention.
 - Forced acculturation, identity and trauma: The refugee case.
 - Community Based Participatory Research as a perspective for community empowerment.
 - A series of UAF President’s Professor Seminars were presented through C.A.N.H.R., which students were able to attend for course credit:
 - William Knowler, M.D., Ph.D., M.P.H. “Type 2 Diabetes and Obesity in Children” and “Prevention of Type 2 Diabetes: Behavioral and pharmacological approaches”
 - Edison Trickett, Ph.D. “Introduction and Brief Overview on Community Psychology, Ecology, Community Intervention and Culture” and “Ecology as a Framework for Community Research and Intervention.”
 - Beti Thompson, Ph.D. “Health Disparities in the Latino Population”, “Health Promotion Conceptual Frameworks” and “Cultural Competency and Collaboration” with Edison Trickett.
- UAA doctoral students in research assistantships supported the research functioning of two major research units on campus, namely, the Center for Human Development and Behavioral Health Research and Services (which in turn funded the doctoral students); in that capacity doctoral students provided the following:
 - Data entry
 - Literature searches
 - Data analysis, both qualitative and quantitative
 - Empirical report writing (technical reports, evaluation plans, results sections, etc.)
 - Development and piloting of surveys
 - Participation in writing seminars
 - Participation on a research team
- UAF doctoral students in research assistantships supported the research functioning of two major research and training units on campus, namely, the Center for Alaska Native

Health Research and the Alaska Rural Behavioral Health Training Academy (which in turn funded the doctoral students); in that capacity doctoral students provided the following:

- Data entry
- Literature searches
- Data analysis, both qualitative and quantitative
- Empirical report writing (technical reports, evaluation plans, results sections, etc.)
- Development and piloting of surveys
- Participation in writing seminars
- Participation on a research team
- UAA doctoral students began contributing to the research literature through submission of research presentations and manuscripts; to date the following products have been accepted:
 - UAA Doctoral Student Presentations
 - Dewane, S., Brems, C., Johnson, M., Casto, D., & Corey, S. (2007, August). Physicians' knowledge, attitudes, beliefs, and behaviors regarding fetal alcohol syndrome. Poster accepted for presentation at the 115th Annual Convention of the American Psychological Association, San Francisco.

 - Two sections of PSY 260L (1-credit statistics lab for psychology majors) – instructing a total of 42 undergraduate students
 - PSY 425 (3-credit course for psychology majors) - instructing a total of 21 undergraduate students
 - PSY 345 (3-credit course for psychology majors) - instructing a total of 43 undergraduate students
 - PSY 690 (1-credit course for graduate psychology students) – instructing a total of 8 graduate students
- UAF doctoral students taught three courses in Fall 2007:
 - PSY 345 (3-credit course for psychology majors) – instructing a total of 14 undergraduate students
 - PSY A445 (3-credit course for psychology majors) – instructing 30 undergraduate students
- UAA doctoral students taught four courses in Spring 2008:
 - Two sections of PSY 260L (1-credit statistics lab for psychology majors) – instructing a total of 48 undergraduate students
 - PSY 425 (3-credit course for psychology majors) - instructing a total of 31 undergraduate students
 - PSY 345 (3-credit course for psychology majors) - instructing a total of 39 undergraduate students
- UAF doctoral students taught two courses in Spring 2008:
 - PSY 101 (3-credit course required for all psychology majors) – instructing a total of 86 undergraduate students.
 - PSY 345 (3-credit course for psychology majors) – instructing a total of 17 undergraduate students.
- UAF doctoral students taught two courses in Summer 2008:
 - PSY 310 (3-credit course for psychology majors) - instructing a total of 6 undergraduate students.
 - PSY 345 (3-credit course for psychology majors) – instructing a total of 7 undergraduate students.
- UAA doctoral students served as teaching assistants for two courses in Fall 2007:
 - PSY 150 (3-credit required course for psychology majors) assisting with a total of 97 (52+45 in two sections) undergraduate students
 - PSY 260L (1-credit required psychology lab) – assisting with a total of 44 (22+22 in two sections) undergraduate students
- UAA doctoral students served as teaching assistants for one course in Spring 2008:
 - PSY 355 (required psychology lab for a 4-credit course for psychology majors) – assisting with a total of 36 (18+18 in two sections) undergraduate students
- UAA doctoral student served as the ANPsych UAA Campus Coordinator providing recruitment and outreach efforts, tutoring and mentoring services, as well as hosting and sponsoring workshops
- UAF doctoral student served as the ANPsych UAF Campus Coordinator providing recruitment and outreach efforts, tutoring and mentoring services, as well as hosting and sponsoring workshops

- UAF doctoral student served as the Psychology Department Clinic Service Assistant providing assistance to the clinic director in the development of forms, manuals and operations of the clinic.
- UAA doctoral students supported clinical services provision through practicum placement in the Psychological Services Center, Alaska Children's Services, Providence Family Medical Center, and Veterans Administration Medical Center providing:
 - Approximately 1000 hours of therapy services to students and community members
- UAF doctoral students supported clinical services provision through practicum placement in the Psychology Department Clinic, Norton Sound Health Corporation, providing:
 - Approximately 684 hours of therapy services to students and community members
- UAA doctoral students supported community services provision through practicum placement in the Salvation Army Clitheroe Center, American Cancer Society, and Cook Inlet Tribal Council (where the first joint program Ph.D. student was placed in an Alaska Native Behavioral Health agency) providing:
 - Over 1000 hours of services to community members
 - Salvation Army Clitheroe Center specific services provided included program evaluation focusing on developing an outcome measurement and quality improvement system for the substance abuse treatment facility.
 - Cook Inlet Tribal Council specific services provided:
 - Research conducted to meet federal grant requirements for needs assessment/program development for the "Strategic Prevention Framework – State/Tribal Incentive Grant." (this research was subsequently presented to stakeholders that included several local agencies and the Municipality of Anchorage. The recommendations from this research were used in the program development phase of the grant) :
 - Gonzales, J. (April 2008). A Qualitative Analysis of Underage Alcohol Access, Usage, and Prevention Approaches in Anchorage, Alaska.
 - Oral co-presentation on CITC's Agency Without Walls program at Administration for Children and Families' annual Grant Clusters Conference in Washington D.C.
 - Sole-presentation oral presentation on impacts of dual-economy systems in rural Alaska on Alaska Native men.
 - American Cancer Society primary project was working on while at ACS was putting on the ACS Survivorship Conference. This entitled gathering professionals from various fields (medicine, psychology) to speak about survivorship issues (cancer pain/ neuropathy; fatigue/sleeplessness; cognitive difficulties; sexual dysfunction; and nutrition). To close the conference a panel of survivors with various types of cancer shared their stories with the audience members. Around 60 community members attended the conference.
- UAF doctoral students supported community services provision through practicum placement in the LEAP Alternatives to Violence Program providing:
 - Over 800 hours of services to community members
 - Specific services provided included creating a Telebehavioral health manual, including cultural considerations for telehealth delivered service manual and travel to rural community to strengthen relationships, conducts needs assessment, and determine teledelivered equipment options.
- UAA doctoral students conducted a one-year program evaluation and consultation project through Program Evaluation and Community Consultation with McLaughlin Youth Center, Denali Family Children's Services, Salvation Army Booth Memorial Home, Cares for Kids Crisis Center, Safe Harbor Inn.

- McLaughlin project specifics: program evaluation for researching and statistically analyzing the sexual and nonsexual recidivism rates of juvenile sex offenders who have completed the juvenile sex offender treatment program while incarcerated at McLaughlin, and the implications of the Adam Walsh Act of 2008.
 - Safe Harbor Inn project specifics: A technical report and presentation was provided to Safe Harbor Inn, which was utilized in their successful efforts to obtain funding for the expansion of another site. The primary objectives of the evaluation were to gain information from the referring agencies, neighbors, community stakeholders, and donors as to which services they believe have been beneficial, which services could use improvement, and suggestions for expansion. The evaluation included qualitative and quantitative questionnaires or interviews with members from each of the four groups mentioned above.
- UAF doctoral students conducted a one-year program evaluation and consultation project through Program Evaluation and Community Consultation with University of Alaska Fairbanks Office of Multicultural Affairs and Diversity, Maniilaq Association in Kotzebue and Kiana, and the University of Alaska Fairbanks Leadership Program.
 - Leadership Program specifics: facilitated the leaderships understanding of the student body in order to improve recruitment and retention of students. Conducted a UAF wide survey, presented results and findings, and facilitated meetings with leadership program and rural student services program.
- The program created learning opportunities for other students and faculty in the Departments of Psychology through the offering of colloquia, for example, the following seminars and lectures were open to all:
 - James Bray Colloquium " Family, Developmental and Ethnic Factors in Adolescent Alcohol Use."
 - Linda Crothers colloquium " Injection Drug Use, Injection Related Abscesses and Needle Exchange Regulation"
 - Patrick Dulin colloquium " Acceptance and Commitment Therapy Research: Previous, Current and Future Directions"
 - Vivian Gonzalez colloquium " The Relationship of Suicidal Ideation and Alcohol Use in Underage Drinkers: An Affect Regulation Mode"

- UAA doctoral students supported clinical services provision through practicum placements at the following sites, providing approximately 3000 hours of therapy services to students and community members:
 - UAA Psychological Services Centers
 - Providence Family Medical Center
 - Southcentral Foundations Primary Care Center
 - Kenaitze Indian Tribe’s Nakenu Family Center
 - Anchorage Community Mental Health Services
 - Pathway Home Services
- UAF doctoral students provided clinical services through practicum placements at the following sites, providing approximately 160 hours of therapy services to students and community members:

- Psychology Department Clinic
 - Our Grandmother's House
 - Fort Wainwright
- A UAA doctoral student served as the ANPsych UAA Campus Coordinator providing outreach, mentoring, and advocacy efforts serving approximately 30 students
- UAF doctoral student served as the ANPsych UAF Campus Coordinator providing recruitment and outreach efforts, tutoring and mentoring services, as well as hosting and sponsoring workshops
- UAA doctoral students supported community services provision through practicum placements at the following sites, providing over 1000 hours of services to community members:
 - Providence Family Medical Center: Responsible for developing, implementing, and evaluating a model of interdisciplinary medical group visits related to diabetes care and treatment for individuals from diverse cultural backgrounds. In addition, worked on planning and organizing behavioral and mental health aspects of group visits and assisted the agency on diverse integrated health promotion activities.
 - Alaska Children's Services: Responsible for developing and implementing culturally appropriate training to community members and mental health professionals across the state of Alaska and providing grant writing support. Experience included suicide prevention training-of-trainers, training of essential information about fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, and developing a youth specific suicide prevention training curriculum.
 - Alaska Psychiatric Institute: Projects include connecting the Recovery Mall staff and clients to cultural and needed trainings, grant research/writing, and Recovery Mall data analysis.
 - Alaska Psychiatric Institute's TeleBehavioral Health Services Clinic: Projects included generating policies and procedures, creating training materials, co-teaching a special topics course in social work with other community partners, and generating preliminary data analysis plans
 - Alaska Native Justice Center: Project included assisting with managing a juvenile sex offender re-entry planning grant "Safe Return", leading a planning process that will result in a juvenile sex offender management plan for juveniles living and returning to rural Alaska where resources are limited, providing an in-depth gap analysis for juvenile sex offenders in rural areas, conducting an analysis of the impact of agency policies and legislation on juvenile sex offender management, and addressing the key issue of providing reentry services in rural communities that lack the resources to easily provide adequate supervision for juvenile sex offenders.
- UAA doctoral students conducted program evaluation and consultation projects at the Anchorage School District.
 - Anchorage School District Department of Indian Education, Project K'il: Contributed to capacity enhancement activities during Project Ki'l's first year including the development of ethical evaluation procedures for participants, the development of original quantitative and qualitative data collection instruments, and the pilot testing of such measures. Evaluation capacity enhancement activities also involved the provision of program consultation.
- UAA doctoral students in pre-doctoral internship supported clinical services provision through the following placements, providing approximately 3000 hours of therapy services to community members,

- Alaska Psychiatric Institute: Services rotations including psychotherapy and psychological assessment for the civil units, the forensic unit, the long-term unit, and telebehavioral health. Psychological assessments and telebehavioral health program consultation for Kotzebue including training on vicarious trauma for all of the region's village based counselors-VBC's.
- Providence Family Medicine Residency (clinical component):
Services included providing cultural competent interventions including child, individual, couples, group and family therapy. Some of the therapeutic services included treatment of Axis I and Axis II disorders, relationship problems, stress, grief, adjustment issues, health concerns, behavioral problems, and chronic medical diseases. Responsibilities included serving as roving behavioral health specialist. In this role, duties included conducting mental health screenings, developing behavioral management plans, providing brief therapy focusing on health promotion, conducting risk assessment, providing crisis management, and facilitation of hospitalization. In addition to clinical work, training on the core competencies involved in the provision of clinical supervision from a developmental supervision paradigm was provided. Responsibilities also included assisting the site in developing and implementing clinical psychology-based training programs for the primary care staff, including patient-centered care, motivational interviewing, suicide risk assessment and management and cultural competency training.
- Center for Behavioral Health Research and Services (community and research component):

Research Contributions by Doctoral Students

- UAA doctoral students in research assistantships supported the research functioning of two major research units on campus, namely, the Center for Human Development and the Center for Behavioral Health Research and Services (which in turn funded the doctoral students); in that capacity doctoral students provided the following:
 - Data entry
 - Literature searches
 - Data analysis, both qualitative and quantitative
 - Empirical report writing (technical reports, evaluation plans, results sections, etc.)
 - Development and piloting of surveys
 - Participation in writing seminars
 - Participation on a research team
- UAA doctoral students began contributing to the research literature through submission of research presentations and manuscripts; during this academic year, the following products were produced:
 - UAA Doctoral Student Publications

Research Contributions by Doctoral Students

- UAA doctoral students in research assistantships supported the research functioning of two major research units on campus, namely, the Center for Human Development and the Center for Behavioral Health Research and Services (which in turn funded the doctoral students); in that capacity, doctoral students provided the following:
 - Data entry

- Literature searches
- Data analysis, both qualitative and quantitative
- Empirical report writing (technical reports, evaluation plans, results sections, etc.)
- Development and piloting of surveys
- Participation in writing seminars
- Participation on a research team
- UAF doctoral students in research assistantships supported the research functioning of a major research unit on campus, namely, the Center for Alaska Native Health Research (which in turn funded the doctoral students); in that capacity doctoral students provided the following:
 - Empirical report writing (technical reports, evaluation plans, results sections, etc.)
 - Development and piloting of surveys
 - Participation in writing seminars
 - Data analysis, both qualitative and quantitative
 - Literature searches and literature reviews
 - Grant writing (e.g. integrating literature)
 - Preparing and co-presenting powerpoint presentations for community and academic audiences
 - Rural fieldwork, community networking, co-facilitating Community Planning Group meetings
 - Participation in CANHR seminars and conferences (i.e. qualitative analysis, CBPR, statistics with small samples)
 - Participation on a research team
- UAF doctoral students in research assistantships supported the research functioning of a Division of the State of Alaska, namely, the Division of Behavioral Health by participating in data analysis, literature reviews, and co-authored two technical reports:
 - State of Alaska, Department of Health and Social Services, Division of Behavioral Health (December, 2010). Alaska Screening Tool 2010: Supporting Clinical Decision Making. Anchorage, AK: Author.
